Orlando, FL (PRWeb) April 2, 2007 -- Orlando-based Wave Software, an innovator in the de-duplication, re-generation and export of native email files, and TRILANTIC, a leading provider of European e-disclosure services, announced today they have formed a strategic partnership to provide clients with new cost-effective and time-saving electronic discovery and litigation support processes.

This partnership provides law firms and corporate legal departments with the ability to use Wave Software's Trident product to process and de-duplicate emails, then use TRILANTIC's range of software and services to review and produce emails in their native format in response to discovery requests and disclosure requirements.

Emails and the metadata associated with them now account for the bulk of disclosable documents in virtually any civil or white-collar criminal case. Lawyers need a fast, easy way to prepare this electronic information for disclosure and process it so they're sure they're sending the correct documents and are not subject to inadvertent exposure.

"Law firms are bringing technology in-house and exploring more time and cost-efficient options in light of the growth of data discovery," states Robert Childress, president of Wave Software. "With increased cost pressures clients face, everyone, from those who lead litigation teams to non-lawyer litigation support staff, is seeking more sensible methods of managing data around e-discovery and e-disclosure. By partnering with TRILANTIC, we are combining the benefits of our unique software and service with TRILANTIC's to provide an inclusive way for litigation professionals across the globe to save time and costs."

Nigel Murray, managing director of TRILANTIC, adds that: "With our partnership with Wave Software, we provide law firms and corporations who want to process their data internally, combined with TRILANTIC's review tools, the ability to manage electronic data from start to finish, for the entire litigation lifecycle. TRILANTIC plus Trident gives anyone familiar with Microsoft Outlook functions the immediate capability to manage all electronically stored information in its native format, or in just about any format the legal world would want."
