In the recent 2007 Socha-Gelbmann Survey TRILANTIC is cited as a top eDiscovery provider

- TRILANTIC scoops a double ranking for both Presentation and Law Firm recommendation -

Orlando, FL, August 18, 2007: TRILANTIC – a leading provider of European legal eDiscovery services - has been officially recognized as a major player. In the recent, highly respected and comprehensive '2007 Socha-Gelbmann 5th Annual Electronic Discovery Survey', TRILANTIC was ranked as a Top 20 eDiscovery provider based on Law Firm recognition. In addition, they were cited as a Top 10 provider in the (trial) presentation category.

Attending the ILTA conference in Orlando this next week, TRILANTIC's Managing Director, Nigel Murray said: "Being recognized by the Socha-Gelbmann survey represents an important milestone for TRILANTIC. What matters most to me is the Top 20 ranking based on Law Firm recognition, as this audience is our current and future clients. This ranking, the only one awarded to a non US vendor, truly demonstrates that TRILANTIC's absolute commitment to provide our clients and partners with a comprehensive, professional and top-quality service is being realized."

As a large number of litigation and regulatory cases being fought in the US have a UK or European dimension, TRILANTIC's experience in Europe and comprehensive service offering to US clients is particularly strong. Nigel Murray was a founder of the litigation support industry in Europe, therefore his specialist knowledge that he brings to any new brief, wherever the client is based, is impressive and valuable.

Nigel Murray continued: "We are constantly seeking to evolve our technical offering. TRILANTIC's innovation and creative solutions for our clients help give us the edge. TRILANTIC has recently started offering clients the capability to process foreign language documents. This is a massive advance, and in-synch with the current, ever-increasing global challenges facing our industry."

In the current legal arena, eDiscovery is becoming a necessity and therefore the sector is growing fast, and the Socha-Gelbmann Survey is a quality bench-mark for the whole industry. According to their 5th Annual Electronic Discovery Survey, in 2006 the total market for eDiscovery services and software totaled almost $2billion, and Socha-Gelbmann predict that it will grow to over $4billion by 2009.

George Socha, of Socha Consulting and Tom Gelbmann, of Gelbmann & Associates, commented, "Our annual survey has a long, hard look at the industry. The quality offering of the companies in these top ranks, such as TRILANTIC, really do mark them out from the rest. And the strong growth that we predict globally for eDiscovery is totally realistic based on the explosive growth being seen in the use of technology within the legal arena. Recent trends show that clients increasingly require their legal firms to be in a state of permanent litigation readiness: this is only realistically achievable through the use of eDiscovery."
