TRILANTIC to Host International E-Discovery Track at LegalTech New York

U.S. and European leading experts on EU data privacy issues share a platform for two important and informative sessions

London – December 7, 2009 – TRILANTIC, a leading U.K.-based legal support provider focused on electronic discovery services, today announced their sponsorship of the popular education track titled, “International E-Discovery,” at the annual LegalTech New York conference being held February 1-3, 2010 at the New York Hilton. The International E-Discovery track will be held on the first day of the show, Monday, February 1, beginning at 10:30 a.m.

The importance of understanding EU data privacy issues when embarking on electronic discovery outside of the U.S. cannot be understated, as litigation, regulatory and compliance matters often require rapid data collections, which if not done according to the rules, could result in breaking criminal laws. Corporate and law firm attorneys consequently must stay abreast of current laws and regulations governing that data to ensure it is handled properly throughout every step of the process.

The TRILANTIC-sponsored track includes two sessions, during which panels of leading experts from both the United States and the European Union will introduce and discuss critical, current issues associated with collecting data located in the EU. The aim of the sessions is to give attendees a broad understanding of the issues, and to enable them to go away knowing what they can and cannot do with respect to data in the EU.

LegalTech New York is the United States legal industry’s largest and most important annual conference and exhibition. The three-day event brings together leading technology and service providers along with prominent experts and thought leaders, providing unparalleled educational content and exhibits to legal professionals from across the country.
